Hawaii Attorney General Joins Fight Against Efforts to Undermine U.S. Census

HONOLULU – Hawaii Attorney General Clare E. Connors today joined a large coalition of attorneys general, cities, counties, and the bipartisan U.S. Conference of Mayors in taking legal action against the Trump Administration’s impairment of the 2020 Decennial Census. Earlier this month, the U.S. Census Bureau announced that it was reducing — by an entire month, from October 31 to September 30 — the time in which self-response questionnaires will be accepted and door-to-door follow-ups by census enumerators will take place. The coalition filed an amicus brief in National Urban League v. Ross, supporting the plaintiffs’ request for a nationwide stay or preliminary injunction to halt this “Rush Plan.” The coalition argues, that this expedited schedule will hamstring the bureau’s ongoing efforts to conduct the census and will thus impair the accuracy of its enumeration of the total population of each state.

“The accuracy of the census count is something we all should care about deeply,” said Attorney General Connors. “It the basis for so many things that fundamentally impact the citizens of our state, including political representation and federal funding allocations. The government’s goal should be greater fidelity to accuracy rather than less.”

In today’s brief — filed in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California — the coalition of 23 attorneys general, 5 cities, 4 counties, and the U.S. Conference of Mayors, led by New York Attorney General Letitia James, argue that amici have a direct stake in this dispute, as the decennial census determines the states’ political representation in Congress, provides critical data for states’ redistricting efforts, and affects hundreds of billions of dollars in federal funding to states and localities. An inaccurate census will directly impair those interests, inflicting harms that will persist for the next decade. The administration’s efforts to reduce the time for both self-responses of the questionnaire sent to every household across the country, as well as non-response follow-up operations for those who don’t respond, will inevitably harm the accuracy of the population count. The shorter time period also flies in the face of what the Census Bureau previously said itself was necessary to conduct an accurate count, as it alters the deadline that the bureau had adopted specifically to accommodate the unique difficulties posed by the coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic.

An undercount would have a serious impact on Hawaii and other states, and would also affect billions of dollars of federal funding that are dependent on the decennial census's population count. In particular, at least 18 federal programs distribute financial assistance based in whole or in part upon each state's relative share of the total U.S. population. Numerous other programs distribute funds based off of census data as well.

Further, self-response rates for 2020 lag behind the rates for 2010 in most states, including in Hawaii. And — due to numerous factors, including Hawaii's large immigrant population — Hawaii's self-response rate remains below the national rate.

The coalition goes on to argue that the court should not view this Rush Plan in a vacuum. The very integrity of the 2020 Decennial Census is at stake, and the defendants — the U.S. Department of Commerce, Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross, the Census Bureau, and Census Bureau Director Steven Dillingham — have all repeatedly attempted to manipulate the census, in multiple ways, under the direction of President Donald Trump by previously attempting to add a citizenship question to the census and by excluding undocumented immigrants from the population count that will be used for congressional apportionment. The coalition highlights that all three of these efforts disregard unambiguous constitutional or statutory requirements, consciously deviate from centuries of consistent practice, and fail to deal honestly with the public and the courts.

Joining Attorney General Connors and Attorney General James in filing today's amicus brief are the attorneys general of California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin, and the District of Columbia. The attorneys general are joined by the cities of Central Falls, Rhode Island; Columbus, Ohio; Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and Phoenix, Arizona. El Paso County, and Hidalgo and Cameron Counties, Texas; and Howard County, Maryland, as well as the bipartisan U.S. Conference of Mayors joined the amicus brief as well.
